

Once again, it is clear the FCC is making decisions based less and less on sound technological factors and more on political and industry pressure. You have abrogated your fiduciary responsibility to the public. It is your responsibility to make decisions for the public good based on proper understanding of sound engineering practice. The FCC has done neither. I am appalled at the commissions lack of sound technological foundation in its recent rulings and proposals.